

Dispose of Medical Sharps the Safe Way!

Around 3 billion medical sharps – including disposable needles, syringes, and lancets – enter the U.S. municipal solid waste stream each year. Residents often discard medical sharps in household or public trash receptacles or flush them down the toilet. These disposal methods put the public, sanitation and hospitality workers, and waste management personnel in danger of injury or infectious disease. Loose sharps also create costly maintenance problems when they become jammed in recycling and waste management equipment.
