The Oklahoma Natural Heritage Inventory (ONHI) is the state's central repository for information on Oklahoma's natural heritage. Established in 1977, ONHI was among the first natural heritage programs in the U.S. and was integrated into the Oklahoma Biological Survey at the University of Oklahoma in 1987.

ONHI is charged with maintaining dynamic, georeferenced information on the state's biological diversity, including rare and endangered species, species of special concern, and significant ecological communities. ONHI also provides information resulting from surveys, studies, and other sources to the people of the state for resource management, research, and education.

ONHI biologists conduct field inventories to find and evaluate occurrences of rare species and communities throughout the state. Biologists record map coordinates, habitat information, and population data at each occurrence of an element. These data are entered into a database consisting of element, site, and occurrence tables for easy storage and retrieval.

Information about rare species and communities from other sources, including natural resource agencies, conservation groups, published literature, and private individuals is also sought by ONHI biologists.

Per (<http://www.oknaturalheritage.ou.edu/content/biodiversity-info/endangered-species/index.php>) the following two species are listed as threatened in McClain County, Oklahoma:

County	Category	Federal	Scientific Name	Common Name

The facilities have already been constructed and have been safely operating since 2002. Additionally, since the injected fluids are permanently contained within the Injection Zone and separated from the biosphere, neither species can be impacted from injection operations.

- The Coastal Zone Management Act, 16 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.

Identify any coastal zones that may be affected by the activities associated with the proposed project.

The OG&E McClain Facility is not located in a coastal zone.
